

10. Factors Affecting the Rate of a Chemical Reaction

What you will accomplish in this experiment

You'll investigate two of the four factors that affect the rate of a chemical reaction.

Specifically, you'll study the impact of:

- Increasing the concentration of each reactant (increasing the number of moles of reactant per liter of solution).
- Increasing the temperature of the reaction by heating.

You'll determine the rate of a reaction by measuring the decrease in reactant concentration over a period of time (as it is being converted into product). You'll then need to make a conclusion as to whether reaction rate increases or decreases when the concentration of each reactant is increased, and when the overall temperature of the reaction is increased.

Concepts you need to know to be prepared

The study of the rate of a chemical reaction is called chemical kinetics.

The rate of a chemical reaction can be studied by measuring either:

- How quickly a reactant is used up, or
- How quickly a product is formed.

More specifically, the change in concentration of a reactant (or of a product) is measured over a certain period of time as the reaction is occurring.

For example, the figure to the left below illustrates how one might measure the rate of decomposition of hydrogen peroxide, H_2O_2 . The hydrogen peroxide molecules decompose to produce water and oxygen gas.

The change in mass as the bubbles of oxygen gas diffuse out of the reaction flask provides a way to measure how quickly the product is being formed. The graph to the right shows the increase in oxygen concentration (as well as the decrease in hydroxide peroxide concentration) over a period of time.
