

PROTEIN SYNTHESIS

TRANSLATION

1. Translation is the process by which the genetic code is used to synthesize a protein. It is the final step in the process of protein synthesis.

2. During translation, the information in the mRNA is used to assemble a protein. The ribosome is the site of translation. It is composed of two subunits, the large and small subunits. The large subunit is responsible for the actual synthesis of the protein, while the small subunit is responsible for the assembly of the ribosome.

3. The ribosome is made up of two subunits, the large and small subunits. The large subunit is responsible for the actual synthesis of the protein, while the small subunit is responsible for the assembly of the ribosome.

THE GENETIC CODE

"One codon at a time"

1. Biological systems use sequences of three nucleotides to specify the amino acids that are used to build proteins. These sequences are called codons.

2. Each codon specifies a particular amino acid. There are 64 possible codons, but only 20 different amino acids are used to build proteins. This is because some codons are redundant, meaning they code for the same amino acid.

3. The genetic code is universal, meaning it is the same in all living organisms. This is because all living organisms use the same set of amino acids to build proteins.

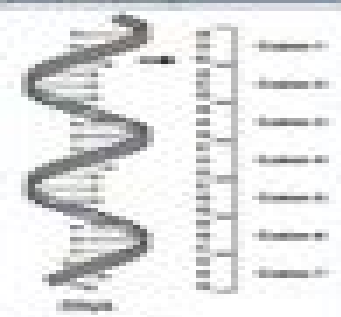

4. The genetic code is a set of rules that determines how the sequence of nucleotides in a gene is translated into the sequence of amino acids in a protein.

"One gene - one protein"

1. Each gene contains the instructions for making a specific protein. The sequence of nucleotides in a gene determines the sequence of amino acids in the protein.

2. The sequence of amino acids in a protein determines its shape and function. This is because the shape of a protein is determined by the sequence of amino acids, and the function of a protein is determined by its shape.
