WHY MEDIA LITERACY? IT'S AN ESSENTIAL LIFE SKILL

Literacy has always been recognized as a source of power. Our challenge today is to help students become literate in a world where . . .

- Information is as likely to be shared via image and sound as in print.
- Technology provides easy connections to global audiences and fingertip access to nearly limitless amounts of information (both trustworthy and misleading).
- Routine life activities (dating, shopping, civic engagement, entertainment, etc.) often take place in the interactive world of the digital commons.

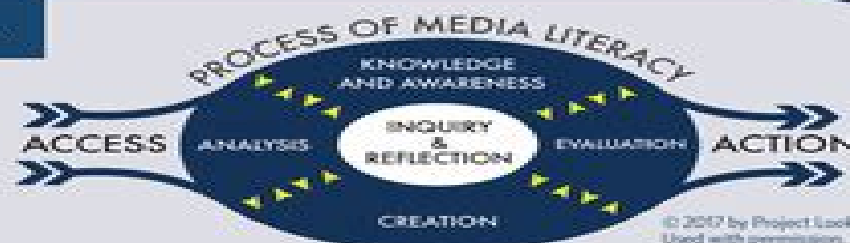

Media literacy is the fundamental skill set that addresses these contemporary needs. Like traditional literacy, it connects to nearly every facet of teaching and learning at every grade level.

TO BECOME MEDIA LITERATE . . .

Becoming media literate is an ongoing, lifelong process centered on inquiry and reflection. Here is a look at the major media literacy competencies and the interplay among them.

What do you notice about the process illustrated in the graphic?

High-quality media literacy activities help students acquire or improve their capabilities in one or more media literacy competencies and intentionally encourage the dispositions listed in the chart.
