

Respiratory System Physiology

Effect of Pressure on Respiration

1. How does pressure in the following structures compare with pressure in the atmosphere?
 During quiet breathing, alveolar pressure is less than atmospheric pressure. Alveolar pressure is 1 mmHg below atmospheric pressure.
 During quiet breathing, intrapleural pressure is less than atmospheric pressure. At rest, intrapleural pressure is 4 mmHg below atmospheric pressure.

2. Diagram of the respiratory system illustrating pressure changes during inspiration and expiration. Label the structures and the pressure changes occurring in the atmosphere, alveoli, and pleural space during inspiration and expiration. (Note: The diagram shows the trachea, bronchi, alveoli, and pleural space. Arrows indicate the direction of air flow and pressure changes.)

3. What are the distribution curves of pressure in the respiratory system during inspiration and expiration?
 During inspiration, the distribution curve of pressure is shifted to the right, indicating that pressure is higher in the alveoli than in the atmosphere. During expiration, the distribution curve of pressure is shifted to the left, indicating that pressure is lower in the alveoli than in the atmosphere.

4. The pressure in the pleural space is lower than the pressure in the atmosphere. Why? What would happen if the pressure in the pleural space were equal to the pressure in the atmosphere?
 The pressure in the pleural space is lower than the pressure in the atmosphere because of the negative pressure in the pleural space. If the pressure in the pleural space were equal to the pressure in the atmosphere, the lungs would collapse.

Respiratory Volumes and Capacities: Spirometry

1. Spirometry is a technique for measuring lung volumes and capacities. Label the structures and the volumes and capacities measured. (Note: The diagram shows the trachea, bronchi, alveoli, and pleural space. Arrows indicate the direction of air flow and the volumes and capacities measured.)
