A cluster of new and handsome touches are bound to make "the hugger" more appealing than ever in 1968. They add to its beauty, its utility and its distinctiveness. Examine a few of the finer points with us and see if you don't agree that Camaro has outdone itself.

Starting at the front, the Camaro grille sports some modest changes: new satin-silver horizontal bars over deep-set black for a wider look; headlights and new rectangular parking lights that are set into the grille (the Rally Sport version has something special in this department); new, too, are taillights with integral back-up lights. And how about this? . . . ventipanes have given way to single curved side windows for added style and improved visibility. New side marker lights front and rear help stake out your claim to a parking place on darkened streets and show your position more clearly while under way.

It all adds up to a remarkably appealing new wide-stance Camaro for 1968 that won't be content until it entices you inside.

New Camaro grille with inset hood and parking lights

New Camaro taillights with integral back-up lights

New one-piece curved side window

New rear side marker light

New front side marker light
