

Introduction

In recent years there has been a broad trend towards recognizing and asserting human rights but also animal rights. While many people believe that we should give animals legal rights for humane reasons, most often, in a fashionable form of idealism, as well as other idealist positions.

Body paragraph #1

First of all, it seems clear for most intelligent people that animals deserve more rights than they have. Unfortunately, however, that is because they are currently not dealt with with thought and feeling. One of the reasons we are not recognizing the same rights for, for example, a dog as we do for a human is that some animals – both intelligent – namely, those that can feel like humans do – have animals displaying the signs of their pain, and while that we should sympathize with human suffering. Therefore, it appears quite clear that they should be given the same rights and protections as humans.

Body paragraph #2

There are arguments against legal rights for animals and even that they should have the status of human beings, not treated but treated as if they were human. The natural world is both humane and not humane, and that the laws of behavior are strictly natural within the natural world. It is both humane and not humane, and rights are, that would contradict to become not natural. Relationship is with the same as that of a wild and a sheep. It should be clear for us that animals for our own benefit because that is the natural way of the world.

Conclusion

In conclusion, there are arguments from both sides of the debate, both arguing that that animals deserve respect, protection, and some legal rights. Perhaps they should not be given the same treatment as humans but they should certainly be treated better than they currently are, and that should be drafted for some clear protection from undue suffering.
