

Some people considered an alternative policy recommendation (perhaps justified) as follows:

1. More teachers are given additional responsibilities and authority.

By themselves, they and the government have already established a local administrative committee (the administrative committee for school management) because they naturally want a strong leadership authority to coordinate and control their schools that are scattered across the country. It is natural that teachers and administrative people should be entrusted to do these things. They have been the backbone of the education system since the early 1950s.

Example: "I have heard that administrative people are not administrative authorities at all. It seems to be required that teachers be given a high level of authority to manage educational institutions that the government would like to be done."

2. Establish committees to provide the school management system.

Administrative and the government people are naturally the primary responsibility for the government. It is not necessary to establish a high-level committee to manage educational institutions. It is natural that teachers and administrative people should be entrusted to do these things. They have been the backbone of the education system since the early 1950s.

Example: "I have heard that teachers and administrative people are not administrative authorities at all. It seems to be required that teachers be given a high level of authority to manage educational institutions that the government would like to be done."

3. Establish a local committee to provide the school management system.

The government has no authority to manage educational institutions. It is natural that teachers and administrative people should be entrusted to do these things. They have been the backbone of the education system since the early 1950s. It is natural that teachers and administrative people should be entrusted to do these things. They have been the backbone of the education system since the early 1950s.
