Supersonic Business Jet flying at Mach 2 cruise speed could virtually halve the travelling time which would enormously enhance the mobility and flexibility. In order to achieve this ambition a paradigm shift is required. New technologies must be established, the impact on the environment must be understood and minimised, existing regulations must be changed to permit overland flight restrictions, and the product still needs to be economically viable. All of the above aspects must be considered and will be subject for discussion within this Master Thesis. See also figure Research Needs Associated with Particulate Emissions at Airports.
