by Eleanor Wakefield

There are several vital elements to any successful college essay. This handout will define those elements and show you how to put them together using an outline. Following this format will help you keep your thoughts organized and get your essay underway.

Elements of an Essay

Introduction: Usually an introduction starts broad and narrows down to your specific topic, ending in the thesis. This is your opportunity to establish why readers might be curious about your general topic, catch their attention, or put your essay in context.

Thesis: Your introduction should end with a clear, specific thesis statement, which will tell readers exactly what your paper will be arguing. Each body paragraph will directly and obviously support your thesis.

Body Paragraphs: An essay usually has at least three body paragraphs, and these will be the arguments, evidence, or topics that support your thesis.

Topic Sentences: Each body paragraph will begin with a topic sentence which introduces its topic. All of the information in that paragraph will be clearly and logically related to that topic sentence, which in turn should obviously relate to the thesis.

Support: You use arguments, data, facts, analysis, quotes, anecdotes, examples, details, etc. to support your topic sentences and flesh out your body paragraphs. A good rule of thumb is to have at least three points to support each topic sentence.

Transitions: An effective essay will show the connection between paragraphs with transitions. These can be the final sentence of each body paragraph or can be integrated into the next topic sentence with transition words.

Conclusion: A conclusion should wrap up your essay, but should not introduce new information or arguments. It should begin with a sentence that looks a lot like your thesis to summarize the general points of the paper as a whole, and then draw your paper neatly to a close.

advice and guidance available to applicants on the World Wide Web this study will analyze the guidance that is available to motivate and guide applicants as they embark on writing their essay Second this study examines the college application essay and will create a categorization of the application essay topics on which a select group of applicants chose to write The purpose is not to evaluate the applicant or their demographics nor is it to suggest best practices for college applicants to follow when writing their essays Furthermore as an examination of popular media and of narrative expression this analysis does not attempt to reveal a causal link between media and the resulting narratives Instead this inductive analysis develops a baseline theory that begins a discussion of the application essay and the multitude of information that might guide its creation The motivation for this study is grounded in the following 1 many colleges and universities employ selective practices in their admissions process and they consider the application essay to be a helpful tool in selecting from among otherwise academically eligible students 2 applicants consider the essay to be one of the most challenging and unfamiliar aspects of the application and 3 a multi million dollar industry has developed to assist students with college and university applications This research supports prior studies that indicate that the writing of college application essays or personal statements is in fact as Paley 1996 suggests an exercise in a rhetorical conundrum Applicants emerge from the angst and confusion of how to approach and what to write about in their college application essay to produce a work that reveals personal characteristics that they think are important to college admissions officers and that they hope will ultimately result in admission to their institution of choice
