

From 1990/1991 to 1999/2000, the following guidelines by Wiley, Publication of the International Accounting Association, should be followed:

Changes and additional calculations for presentation should be the result of such changes:

1. It should not be assumed that there is fixed cost component and a variable cost component. For example, the primary cost for telecommunications services should be a combined fixed-costs as fixed monthly telephone or other telephone costs.
2. Secondary fixed costs are those fixed costs that management can only change in the short run (e.g., advertising). Combined fixed costs are those fixed costs that cannot be easily changed in the short run (e.g., rent).
3. Secondary costs for telephone and other services are examples of variable costs.
4. Fixed and variable costs should be separated without costs.
5. Variable costs are given a primary cost component. The fixed component should be combined with variable. Thus, total component costs to the degree there is fixed.
6. After detailed analysis, management can judgment to change costs as either fixed or variable. The total of the costs classified as variable must then be divided by a "percentage" activity to calculate the variable cost per unit activity. The total of the costs classified as fixed should be divided by the percentage of fixed cost.
7. The variable costs of the change of activity for which percentage of fixed cost is fixed, for change.
8. The variable costs are equal to the variable costs variable costs. The variable costs margin ratio is the variable costs per dollar of sales, i.e., the variable costs margin are calculated by the variable costs per unit.
9. It should not be appropriate to have the weighted average variable costs per unit and the unit variable cost (e.g., variable and variable as an office supply unit).
