Abstract: This literature review examines research on the effectiveness of various types of social support interventions for individuals with chronic health conditions. The review focuses on the following research questions: (1) What types of social support interventions are most effective? (2) What are the mechanisms of action for these interventions? (3) What are the barriers to the implementation of these interventions? The review finds that social support interventions can be effective in improving health outcomes, but the effectiveness varies depending on the type of intervention and the population being studied. The review also identifies several barriers to the implementation of these interventions, including lack of resources, lack of knowledge, and lack of motivation.
