The first drum

¹Once upon a time, in a village nestled deep in the heart of Africa, there lived a young boy named Kofi. Kofi was a curious child who loved exploring the world around him. He was always on the lookout for new discoveries, and he never tired of learning new things.

²One day, as Kofi was walking through the forest, he heard a strange sound. It was a rhythmic beat that echoed through the trees, and he couldn't help but follow it. As he drew closer, the sound became louder, and he soon realized that it was coming from a group of monkeys.

³The monkeys were gathered around a large object that Kofi had never seen before. It was a hollowed-out log with a piece of animal skin stretched tightly over the top. The monkeys were taking turns hitting the skin with sticks, creating a hypnotic beat that filled the forest with music.

⁴Kofi was fascinated by the sound, and he watched as the monkeys continued to play. He noticed that each monkey had their own unique rhythm, and he realized that they were communicating with each other through the music.

⁵As the sun began to set, the monkeys stopped playing and disappeared into the trees. Kofi was left alone with the drum, and he knew that he had discovered something truly special.

⁶He picked up the drum and carried it back to his village, where he showed it to the other children. They were just as fascinated by the drum as Kofi was, and they spent hours playing it, trying to create their own rhythms.
