Abstract—The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders among different types of workers in the garment industry. The study included 600 employees from two garment factories in Mexico City. A questionnaire was administered to all participants, which included information about their work conditions, symptoms, and health status. The results showed that the prevalence of musculoskeletal disorders was higher among workers in the sewing department than among workers in the cutting department. This finding suggests that the physical demands of the sewing department are more likely to lead to musculoskeletal problems.
