

■ At Idling

When the speed control lever (1) is set in the idling position, the governor spring (2) is almost relaxed and the idling spring (4) of small tension alone is at work. The idling spring works in the direction A to increase fuel supply. To the contrary, the governor weight (5) extends by the centrifugal force in the direction of E to push the governor shaft (3) and in turn move the governor lever (7) in the direction of D to decrease the fuel supply. The engine will idle in a condition in which the two forces are balanced with each other.

■ At Idling to Maximum Speed

When the engine rotates at idling to maximum speeds, engine rotates at a constant speed at the point where the governor spring tension and the governor weight's centrifugal force are well balanced. If the load is increased, the engine speeds down and the centrifugal force of the governor weight (5) becomes smaller, so that the control rack (6) is moved in the direction G in which fuel is increased to restore the original speed. In this way, the engine speed is automatically controlled for a constant revolution.

■ At Maximum Engine Speed

When the speed control lever (1) is moved in the direction A, the governor weight (5) is at the maximum centrifugal force, with the governor lever (7) contacting the fuel limiter (3). As the load becomes large, the speed is reduced, decreasing the governor weight's centrifugal force. Then, the governor lever pushes the fuel limiter (the limiter contains a spring) and moves in the direction F. Thus, the control rack (6) is placed at the maximum fuel injection position, producing the maximum engine output power.

■ At Engine Stop

When the governor lever (5) is moved fully in the direction B to the stop position, the governor lever (7) moves in direction G, thus the control rack (6) is set to the stop position (the fuel injection) and the engine stops.

A governor is a device which controls the fuel injection of an engine, depending on fluctuations in load, to keep the engine speed at a constant level. The governor used for this engine is of mechanical type which controls the fuel injection by the centrifugal force of the governor weight and the tension of the springs. Its control weight and the tension of the springs. Its control covers the entire speed range from idling to max rpm. The mechanism consists of the following component part, governor weight, governor lever, governor spring, idling spring, fuel limiter with fuel in torque spring, speed control lever, and others.

■ At Starting

When the speed control lever (5) is moved in the direction of arrow A, the governor lever (2-1) is pulled by the governor spring (3) and the stop lever of the governor lever (1-1) turns in the direction of arrow B and the stop lever comes into contact with the fuel injection limiter pin. The governor lever (1-2) moves together with the governor lever (2) in the same direction, but even when the governor lever (2) has stopped, the governor lever (1) remains pulled by the idling spring (4) to keep turning just by the clearance of the lever's slit in the same direction. This makes the injection pump's control rack move to the maximum fuel injection rate position, facilitating the start.
