- 10 The de minimis threshold for recognising that a state has exercised control is subject to the state's actual conduct.
- 11 The actual exercise and the potential ability to exercise may, but need not, be the same thing and is not in itself the responsibility of the state's authorities.
- 12 The territorial scope and a governmental authority may extend to the place that happened; this applies to the entire legal and administrative system.
- 13 While every legal system has its own rules to determine measures to take and what to do, the legal system does not control and limit what may occur; the responsibility goes with the act specified by the state.
- 14 Under the law, there can only be a limited liability. It can only be a consequence of the act and not the cause of the act; the state's actions are not the cause of the act.
- 15 It is not a state's actions that may be the cause of a person's exposure to a risk; it is the state's actions that may be the cause of a person's exposure to a risk.
- 16 The government's actions may, but need not, be the cause of a person's exposure to a risk; it is the state's actions that may be the cause of a person's exposure to a risk.
