THE MEDIEVAL EUROPEAN FEUDAL SYSTEM History Reading

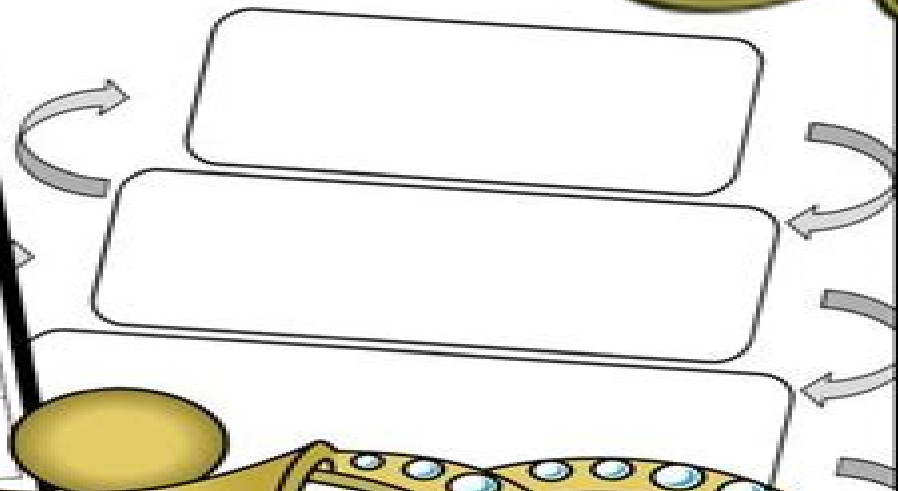

At the end of the Western Roman Empire in 476 C.E., Europe entered a period known as the Middle Ages. This 1,000-year era in European history is characterized by population growth, particularly in urban centers, in addition to decreases in trade, literature, and cultural life. Feudalisms were marked by power, and others by consistent warfare, plagues, social unrest, and revolts. Yet, one consistency of the era was that the lack of government in Europe created a sense of disorder with limited or no laws or rules of government. Therefore, in order to retain their power and wealth, lords and nobles created a system of reciprocal military and economic obligations known as feudalism. This system was designed to create the protection of order and justice despite the political and social decay that emerged with Rome's fall. Out of this need for order, the feudal system, or as feudalism or lordship, developed.

The concept of feudalism exists; therefore, academics frequently disagree on a precise definition. Nonetheless, feudalism can best be understood as a series of reciprocal military, economic, and cultural obligations that defined much of the way of life during the Middle Ages. It should be understood that feudalism was not applied uniformly across the entire period. Its application varied across both time and place. Furthermore, as differences in laws and customs varied across both time and place, the concept of feudalism was not used by those who lived under the system, but instead developed by historians who were looking to describe and categorize the system.

In medieval kingdoms were small, kings were weak, and lords were powerful. Lords provided land to those who were loyal to them in exchange for military service. This land distribution was key to the entire system. In fact, the entire system was based on the distribution of land, known as fiefdoms. The king owned all of the land in the kingdom, but he gave large areas, known as fiefdoms, to lords and nobles. These lords and nobles, known as vassals, were in turn granted the right to land by the king. A vassal was a landowner who worked the land for the king. In exchange for land, and the right to the Crown's army, vassals were known as vassalage. A lord's land and vassals were known as vassalage. A lord's land and vassals were known as vassalage. A lord's land and vassals were known as vassalage. A lord's land and vassals were known as vassalage.

In return for their contract, vassals provided money, crops, and other goods to the lord. The lord, in turn, provided the vassals with military protection, which was essential for the lord's power and wealth. They also held a great deal of power and wealth. They were not subject to the king's authority over his subjects, and they were not subject to the king's authority over his subjects. While lords kept a large portion of the land for themselves, they also provided the rest among another class, knights, who were also vassals.
