

CALIBRATION

Before starting the Generator calibration, carefully study the operation of each control and switch as described in Figure 2 on Page 23.

An AM radio is needed to calibrate bands A, B, C, D, and E. The tuned circuit and component parts for band F have been preadjusted at the factory. If additional accuracy is desired, an FM radio must be used to calibrate band F.

BANDS A THROUGH E

- () Turn the BAND switch to band B.
- () Turn the Modulation switch to EXT MOD.
- () Turn the FINE ATTEN control fully clockwise.
- () Set the COARSE ATTEN switch at HI.
- () Connect the shielded output cable to the Generator RF OUT connector. Place the free end of this cable near the loop or antenna lead of the AM radio, but do not connect it directly to the radio.
- () Turn the Generator and AM radio on. Allow the Generator and radio to warm up for 15 minutes so all components will reach normal operating temperature.

The following procedure will be used to calibrate the Generator.

First, a signal of known frequency is tuned in on the AM radio. Then the dial pointer of the Generator is set to the exact frequency of the station the radio is tuned to. The RF oscillator is then tuned to the same frequency as the radio station by adjusting it until a zero beat is heard in the radio.

This zero beat is the signal that is created by the beating together of the oscillator signal and the station signal in the radio. When the beat is heard, it starts out as a high pitched tone, which gradually changes as the beat frequency becomes lower until the tone becomes very low pitched. Once the zero beat point is passed, the tone gradually increases in pitch until it can no longer be heard.

At these frequencies it is often hard to get a complete zero beat (no sound at all) between the signals. Often, a low pitched tone or a slow popping sound will be as close as you will be able to come to a complete zero beat. The output level of the Generator should be just high enough to give a clear beat sound; do not set the Generator output level higher than necessary.

- () Locate the alignment tool blade supplied with this kit. Refer to Figure 1 and use a pair of long-nose pliers. Insert the blade into the smaller hole of the nut starter until the blade end is flush with the end of the nut starter. This now can be used as a trimmer alignment tool.
