

Addressing mental health can reduce school violence

RAJESH DHAMMI
member of team@ednet.co.za

MENTAL Health is a serious challenge globally. Many people don't even know they suffer from it and those who do feel like they have nowhere to turn to.

Mental issues can manifest themselves in different ways. The most notable is depression, but bullying and violent outbursts are also signs of a mental health challenge.

The South African Depression and Anxiety Group (SADAG) says its helpline has received more than 466 400 calls since January 2021, with one in every five calls being suicide-related. The organisation gets about 1 800 to 2 200 calls a day.

World Mental Health Day is marked every year on October 10 to raise awareness about mental health and well-being around the world and to organise efforts to assist those experiencing mental health issues.

Since 2013, the World Health Organisation (WHO) has mobilised a worldwide campaign for World Mental Health Day. The theme for 2022 was "Make Mental Health for All a Global Priority".

According to 2021 WHO data, it is estimated that 1% of the world's 10- to 19-year-olds are affected by mental disorders, while other studies report a particular pervasiveness of mental disorders among the youth of low- to mid-income countries of sub-Saharan Africa. Half of all adult mental health problems begin as early as age 14, and 75% by 24, making early prevention vital and protection essential.

The rapid rise in violence in South Africa has resulted in schools progressively becoming a venue for violence themselves. The violence is not only between pupils, but is at times directed towards teachers. Schools have become extremely volatile and unpredictable spaces. Reports on television, social media and print media have highlighted the escalation of school violence incidents, such as learners assaulting, bullying and stabbing others learners and educators.

It is therefore crucial to take October as Mental Health Awareness Month seriously to improve and understand the conditions in which pupils and educators find themselves.

Dr Nivisha Parag, Head of School Healthcare Management Studies at Regent Business School, says with South Africa being the lowest-ranked country based on mental well-being, Mental Health Awareness Month in October provides an ideal opportunity to intensify public education about this invisible illness.

"Safe environments must be provided for children and young people to share their feelings, be educated about mental health and self-care, and access to help must be prioritised, to strengthen the foundation for better mental health later in life," Parag added.

More than 50 cases have recently been reported where a pupil fatally stabbed a fellow pupil. The latest case is that of a Cardinal Newman High School pupil in Vorensig, where a learner was stabbed to death on his way to a test tank.

In 2017, the UN Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation (UNESCO) found that at least 247 million children are affected by school violence.

In July last year, the Gauteng Department of Education commissioned the Matthew Goniwe School of Leadership and Governance (MGNLG) to implement school safety programmes in its 15 districts. The initiative was split into two phases, A and B. Phase A was focused on sampling 1 500 schools to assess how prevalent violence and crime are. The Phase B Advocacy programme, known as Ikoko Yethu (our school) has been started and will be centred on developing guidelines that emphasise the creation of mechanisms to more effectively and promptly record, report and manage safety and security issues in schools.

MGNLG said the findings were overwhelming and support interventions were recommended to the department, which has since committed funds to conduct capacity building, security awareness campaigns, and organisation of school safety summits at the district level, among other interventions. MGNLG further indicated that the plan to deal with school violence centres on advocacy and capacity building, which will help with the revitalisation of school safety committees, community members, CBOs and NGOs engagements.

"These precedent deliverables would create avenues for the sustainable management of school safety and security, as well as develop strategies and systems geared towards the improvement of schools, from stakeholders and communities' responsiveness and responses in managing unsafe practices and curbing school violence," the organisation said.

The after-school sector has introduced programmes that are aimed at serving children of all ages. These programmes encompass a range of focus in different areas, such as academic support, youth development art, sports and recreation. The activities children and youth engage in outside school hours are critical to their overall development, highlighting the need for quality after-school programmes in all communities.

These programmes are aimed at boosting South African youths' mental health. Zor Mann, operations director of The Learning Trust, a non-profit organisation that supports and has developed a network of NGO/community-based after-school programmes (APs) in South Africa, is in collaboration with Western Cape Provincial Youth and After School Programme Office as well as the Western Cape Branch of Community Chest to drive the third Lights On After School cam-

"The upsurge of South African young people dealing with mental health conditions is alarming. The majority of South African children are impacted by systemic poverty, high rates of violence and crime, as well as abuse and trauma in their communities. In addition to this, youth are still dealing with Covid-related grief, loss of family income, educational setbacks, and doubts regarding their future," Mann explained.

Another ANP in The Learning Trust network is The School of Hard Knocks (SCHOK), which combines touch rugby with an international socio-emotional learning curriculum to reach more than 150 at-risk adolescent girls, as well as their teachers and caregivers.

SCHOK CEO Jon Hunter-Panotage said: "The Lights On After School campaign is important to create awareness of how ANPs can engage with youth who are affected by trauma at a critical point in their young lives."

As young people's brains are still developing, they have a greater chance of recovering, growing through their experiences, and developing resilience than at any later stage. Good mental health, coupled with positive coping mechanisms, leads to a better future. It affects their education, sets the tone for their relationships, and paves the way for a healthy lifestyle.

The purpose of these programmes is to nurture the well-being of learners and provide them with tools that will help them understand their feelings and thoughts in a way that they might not have previously been taught.

Manella Ngobo is the programme director for the Learner Advancement Group (LAG), which aims to promote the development of strong self-awareness, self-confidence and self-concept. Ngobo said: "We provide learners with practical tools to manage their thoughts and feelings. We encourage them to understand what worries them, to get to the root cause of any anger they may have, and we teach them how to set goals for themselves and their lives."
