Fault Diagnosis Józef Korbicz, Jan M. Koscielny, Zdzisław Kowalczyk, Wojciech Cholewa, 2012-12-06 All real systems in nature physical biological and engineering ones can malfunction and fail due to faults in their components Logically the chances for malfunctions increase with the systems complexity The complexity of engineering systems is permanently growing due to their growing size and the degree of automation and accordingly increasing is the danger of failing and aggravating their impact for man and the environment Therefore in the design and operation of engineering systems increased attention has to be paid to reliability safety and fault tolerance But it is obvious that compared to the high standard of perfection that nature has achieved with its self healing and self repairing capabilities in complex biological organisms fault management in engineering systems is far behind the standards of their technological achievements it is still in its infancy and tremendous work is left to be done In technical control systems defects may happen in sensors actuators components of the controlled object the plant or in the hardware or soft ware of the control framework Such defects in the components may develop into a failure of the whole system This effect can easily be amplified by the closed loop but the closed loop may also hide an incipient fault from being observed until a situation has occurred in which the failing of the whole system has become unavoidable

The analysis of practical skills W.T. Singleton, 2013-06-29 The origins of this book are in my first attempts to understand psychology as a post war student in the Cambridge of the late 1940s Sir Frederic Bartlett and his colleagues in the Psychology Department were talking and writing about the concept of the skill as the fundamental unit of behaviour This made entire sense to me but not apparently to very many other people because the movement dwindled rapidly with the retirement of Sir Frederic in 1952 It got lost within performance studies which were essentially behaviouristic and stimulus response in origin a quite different style of thinking from the gestalt approach of skill psychology This is not a simple dichotomy of course and skill psychology does go some way towards the analytic approach in accepting that a science needs to have a basic element a unit from which the complexities of real behaviour can be constructed into which it can be analysed and in terms of which it can be described and understood The trick is to pick the right unit and I think that skills is an appropriate unit for human behaviour Note the plural although these units are elements they are not identical any more than the ninety odd elements of the physical world are identical The issue is sometimes clarified by considering the analogy with the attempt to describe a house The simplest observable elements here are the brick the piece of stone or the piece of wood
