

HARLEM RENAISSANCE

Formerly enslaved people after the Civil War

BACKGROUND

After the Civil War, most formerly enslaved people remained in the South and tried to build new lives as free American citizens. However, life was difficult due to a number of reasons, including limited economic opportunities, violence from the Ku Klux Klan, widespread discrimination, and disenfranchisement. Jim Crow laws were implemented throughout the South. These were various laws that restricted the freedoms of African Americans. The laws required racial segregation in all public facilities throughout the South. This meant whites and blacks had separate theaters, restaurants, schools, bathrooms, water fountains, elevators, building entrances, and public pools, among other restrictions. African Americans were also forbidden from moving into white neighborhoods.

The laws became so oppressive that millions of Black people began moving to Northern cities. Northern cities had become industrialized, and more workers were needed primarily for factories. Black newspapers like the Chicago Defender published advertisements about the economic opportunities in Northern cities. More than six million African Americans moved from the South to the cities of the North, Midwest, and West from 1915 to 1970 for more freedom and economic opportunities. This became known as the Great Migration. Between 1910 and 1920, the Black population of New York City grew by 65%. The New York City neighborhood of Harlem in Northern Manhattan was one of the most popular destinations for African Americans.
