Congress and the People (p. 123)

In the United States the people are sovereign, but they do not take part in national government directly. They elect representatives to make and carry out laws. Article I of the Constitution gives the lawmaking power to Congress.

Representing the People Each member of Congress represents the people of a particular geographic area. The people who live within that area are called the member's constituents. One way in which a member of Congress represents the people is by representing his or her constituents.

Members of Congress must deal with the demands of organized groups of like-minded people who join together to influence government and its policies. These groups are called interest groups. Members of Congress must also keep in mind the needs of the country as a whole. They try to balance their constituents' special interests with a desire to promote the common good—the outcome that is best for all.

Members of Congress Members of Congress tend to have more in common with one another than with the constituents they represent. They tend to be older than the average age of the population. They are also much wealthier than the general population. Most members are white men. In recent years, however, Congress has become more diverse.

Reading Check Identifying the Main Idea Which groups do members of Congress represent?

The Structure of Congress (pp. 123–124)

Congress is a bicameral, or two-house, legislature. Its two houses are the House of Representatives and the Senate.

The House of Representatives The Constitution states that seats in the House “shall be apportioned among the several States ... according to their respective Numbers.” Apportionment means the distribution of House seats among the states based on population. Each House seat is meant to represent the same number of people. Today the total number of House seats is 435. There are also nonvoting delegates from the District of Columbia, Guam, the U.S. Virgin Islands, and
