OBJECTIVE: To examine the effects of a 12-week, 10-session, manualized, group-based, parent training program on the parenting behavior of parents of children with conduct problems.

DESIGN: A randomized controlled trial.

SETTING: The study was conducted in a community-based setting in the United Kingdom.

PARTICIPANTS: Parents of 100 children with conduct problems were recruited from a community sample.

MEASUREMENTS AND MAIN RESULTS: Parents were randomized to either the parent training program or a control group. The parent training program was designed to teach parents skills in managing their child's behavior. The control group received no intervention. Parents in the parent training program showed significant improvements in parenting behavior compared to parents in the control group. These improvements were maintained at follow-up.

CONCLUSIONS: The parent training program had a significant positive effect on parenting behavior. These findings suggest that parent training programs can be effective in improving parenting behavior in parents of children with conduct problems.

KEY WORDS: Parenting behavior, parent training, conduct problems, children.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged, obese women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 women, 40 to 55 years of age, who were sedentary and obese (BMI  $\geq 30$ ). They were randomly assigned to either a supervised exercise program or a control group. The exercise program consisted of 12 weeks of low-intensity, supervised exercise (3 times per week, 30 minutes per session). The control group consisted of 20 women who did not exercise. The primary outcome measure was the change in body mass index (BMI) from baseline to 12 weeks. Secondary outcome measures included changes in waist circumference, blood pressure, heart rate, and self-reported physical and psychological health. The results showed that the exercise group had a significant decrease in BMI ( $p < 0.05$ ) and waist circumference ( $p < 0.05$ ) compared to the control group. There were no significant differences in blood pressure, heart rate, or self-reported physical and psychological health between the two groups. The findings suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised exercise program can lead to a significant reduction in BMI and waist circumference in sedentary, middle-aged, obese women.
