residential tenancies may heighten the risk of racial discrimination against prospective tenants notwithstanding the fact that such discrimination is unlawful under the Equality Act The First Tier Tribunal not the Secretary of State should decide whether it is within its jurisdiction to consider a new matter raised on an appeal In the report the Committee concludes that the restriction on appeal rights might constitute a serious threat to the practical ability to access the legal system to challenge unlawful immigration and asylum decisions and to enforce the statutory duty to have regard to the need to safeguard and promote the welfare of children when exercising immigration and asylum functions The Committee also comments on other aspects of the Bill
