

Pound of Flesh

Our legal system suggests an ideal known as justice. Often though the average citizen discovers scales out of balance. Neither mending nor healing nor compassion nor even reason results.

In contrast it tears asunder, creates a graver wound and delivers an irreversible severe vindictiveness. On a civil level, for example a divorce aggravates wounds as children or assets are wrestled over in a brutal win or lose outcome. Invisible emotional wounds truly deeper occur with a verdict. The legal remedy makes the offense magnified far greater than the relief it ought to deliver. Better its injustice than the greater injustice anarchy or lawlessness brings.

Courthouses can sadly become legalized fight clubs. Little to no relief to all and in the end greater suffering to all. These are coliscums of raw emotions. Where does the anger go? Perhaps to others or internally directed to self-injury. Court conflicts are preceded by prior conflicts – moral remedies disengage from a legal one. Merciless and mechanical without empathy, the client and lawyer speak two different languages.

In Merchant of Venice Shylock was a supreme villain. A pound of flesh for an unpaid debt? Legal failure to perform permits enforcement of vile punitive revenge.

In today's world a legal Pound of Flesh is a legal remedy paid in cash or jail time or coerced repulsive confession. Another remedy, which is a moral one, becomes an art. Law has a mechanical quantitative answer. This is what justice is – a number in a book and ironclad legal renderings that no wood merchant dare contest.

A lawyer is a rather poor resource – not to repair – emotively a worse source of compassion. No wonder their reputation suffers. Paid handsomely to double one's injuries.

Lawyers practice emotional detachment. Otherwise, an occupational hazard of clinical depression or substance abuse would be risked. Avoid self-actualizing. Do not touch to reassure a client. Doctors do so when telling unpleasant news. Have tissue ready for the tears. Lawyer to your peril, avoid empathy.

The best remedy to a Pound of Flesh comes to us from the statements from Shakespeare's play. May any lawyer, jury, or judge be reading this heed this touching request.
