A diagram illustrating the algebraic identity $(a+b)^2 = a^2 + 2ab + b^2$. It shows a large square on the left, followed by a plus sign, then a square of side a , followed by a minus sign, and finally a square of side b . This represents the process of adding and then subtracting a small rectangle to complete the square.

A diagram illustrating the addition of two squares. On the left, there are two separate squares. To their right is a plus sign. Further right is an equals sign. To the right of the equals sign is a single, larger square that represents the sum of the two original squares.

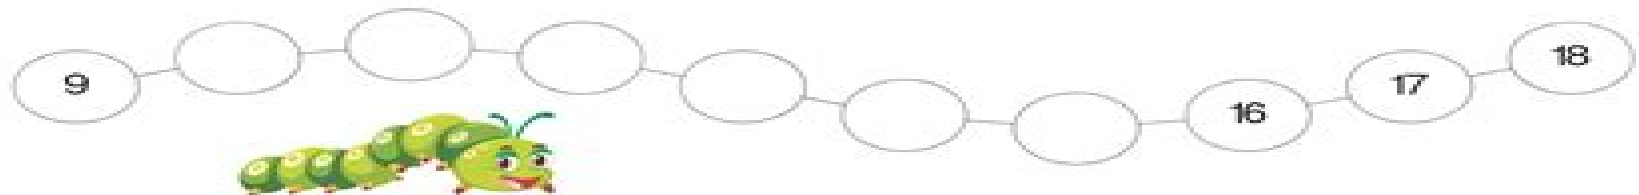

A diagram illustrating the addition of two squares. On the left, there are two separate squares, each with a side length of 1 unit. These are followed by a plus sign. To the right of the plus sign is another square, identical in size to the first two, representing the sum. This is followed by an equals sign and a final square, which is larger than the individual squares, representing the total area of 2 square units.
