Global Highlights 2023

Industrial sectors, which comprise mining, manufacturing and the utilities sectors, grew by 2.3 per cent in 2022 globally. Manufacturing accounted for most of this dynamism, with an increase of 3.2 per cent, while the combined mining and utilities sector contracted by 0.9 per cent. Industry is expected to decelerate in 2023 due to mounting headwinds from various sources. While manufacturing drives industrial growth at the global level, in low-income economies the largest contributor remains the mining and utilities sector.

In recent years, the world seems to be navigating a double decoupling in manufacturing, one positive and one negative. On the positive side, there is evidence of a decoupling between manufacturing activity and CO₂ emissions, with emissions remaining relatively flat while production keeps increasing. This trend is evident in most country groups, although the levels of emission intensity remain high in most cases. On the negative side, there is also a decoupling between manufacturing production and employment. Indeed, higher levels of global manufacturing output have not translated into more jobs. In particular, the employment of women in manufacturing has followed a downward trend, further accelerated due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

A clear global development observed over the last decades is the rebalancing of manufacturing from high-income economies towards middle-income economies, as well as from Northern America and Europe towards Asia and Oceania. The COVID-19 crisis further accelerated this macro-level trend.

Another worldwide megatrend is the expanding importance of higher technology industries in manufacturing. These industries recovered faster post-COVID-19 and have continued expanding dynamically, while growth in lower technology industries has stalled. This divergence could further increase inequalities within and between countries.

Excepting high-income industrial economies and Latin America and the Caribbean, all regions and country groups have achieved progress towards SDG 9 since 2015, although the rate of progress has generally been insufficient to reach the global Goal by 2030. This is a particular cause of concern in least developed countries (LDCs), where industrialization is one of the most promising development strategies.

This edition of the Yearbook included a thematic chapter on innovation statistics. Existing indicators suggest that the world's most innovative economies are concentrated in Europe, Eastern Asia and Northern America. However, further investment in data are needed to fully measure the incidence, drivers, obstacles and impacts of industrial innovation and provide crucial information for guiding policies in this area.
