Essay Example on the Future of Community Policing: A Comprehensive Analysis Essay

Introduction

Community policing is the practice of provision of service by a police officer or police officers that entails the police officer to patrol and work in the same area permanently. The police officer works in partnership with citizens to maintain and keep order in the community. The analysis of this paper is going to study the future of community policing in consideration of the parties that get involved in community policing, such as the community, individual police, and the police agencies.

Social isolation of police officers

In many countries, citizens express hostility and isolation towards police officers. This leads to the police officers being socially separated from other members of society. The social isolation of police officers may be attributed to a number of factors that may include; the history of the social reaction of the police officers (Kappeler & Gaines, 2012). In different settings, police officers from past have been regarded as incompetent professionals. They are mostly associated with brutality, corruption, and individuals who like to serve self-interest before those of the public. With this idea that the public perceives the police officers, it becomes difficult for the citizens to socially accept them in the community. This results in the isolation of the officers by the general public.

Secondly, the force that may contribute to the social isolation of the officers may be the operations that accompany their profession (Kappeler & Gaines, 2012). Sometimes, police officers are forced to act brutally in their service to protect the civil public and to maintain law and order. The actions of brutality that the citizen witness sets them apart because every single time that a citizen witnesses an officer, he definitely gets a reminder of the brutal actions of the police in their service. This has borne stigmatization of individuals in public; thus, it has resulted in the public isolating the officers in order to protect themselves from the stigma, which is regarded as a common reaction. An examination of this social isolation shows that the individual police officers suffer the most significant problem that comes with separation. This is because police officers, just like any other human beings, are social and need to associate and interact with the members of the public freely. Isolation by society limits their interaction, thus resulting in psychological torture that is experienced among the police officers in most of the cases. However, the police agencies equally face a problem resulting from the social isolation of police officers. They cannot gain the trust of the public; thus, the delivery of the services to the public becomes a challenge to the agencies. The society also opts not to provide any meaningful information to the police agencies due to the mistrust and their negative perception about police officers, thus hindering the servicing of police agencies.
