BRIONVEGA

Founded 1961
Milan, Italy

The consumer electronics company Brionvega was founded by the Brion family initially for the production of radio sets. In 1962, after Italy's first television regulations had been established, the company launched the first all Italian television sets. A decade later, it manufactured the first Italian fully transistorized television, the portable Conny M (1972), which was designed by Marco Zanuso and Richard Sapper. The same designers also created the T2 102 radio (1964) with a finger A&S plastic housing, the Alpi 7 television with an angled screen and the cuboid Alpi 17 (1970 television sets), all of which reflected the company's preference for two modern forms and primary colours. Brionvega's product line was less austere than those of German and Danish companies and this helped the company to appeal to a younger market. Achille and Pier Giacomo Castiglioni designed several innovative products for Brionvega, including a wire broadcasting receiver and the famous MR 10 radio gramophone (1965). Marco Bellini also designed a number of products for the company, including the Selen radio and record player with integrated speakers (1975), as did Franco Albini (1970-1980) and Luigi Azzurro (1958-1971). By the time however, the company was undoubtedly finding it difficult to compete with Japanese imports and at some point in the early 1970s it ceased operating. Like its competitors Braun and Sanyo & Wharfedale, Brionvega employed a Modern aesthetic for its product's design, but the styling it promoted was more akin to forms within the contemporary design.
