

The Open Window

Saki

"My aunt will be down presently, Mr Nuttel," said a very self-possessed young lady of fifteen. "In the meantime you must try and put up with me."

Framton Nuttel tried to say something that would make the girl feel special and yet not seem as if he had no wish to see the aunt. He wondered whether visiting so many strangers would help in curing his nerve problem, which was why he was in the country.

His sister, who had stayed in this neighbourhood earlier, had given him a few letters of introduction to some 'nice people' in the countryside. She was worried that he would just stay at home and not speak to anyone, and this would make his nerve problem worse. Framton wondered whether Mrs Sappleton, the lady in whose house he was now to present one of the letters of introduction was 'nice'.

"Do you know many of the people round here?" asked the niece, after a short silence.

"Hardly a soul," said Framton. "My sister was staying here, at the rectory, you know, some four years ago, and she gave me letters of introduction to some of the people here."

"Then you know practically nothing about my aunt?" asked the young lady.

"Only her name and address," admitted the caller. He was wondering whether Mrs Sappleton was married or widowed. Something about the room seemed to suggest that a man lived in the house.

"Her great tragedy happened just three years ago," said the girl. "Maybe your sister had left by then."
