

The Monkey and the Crocodile

Read the passage carefully and answer the following questions.

There was a monkey who lived in an orange tree beside a river. This tree bore more fruits than any other tree in the jungle, and its fruits were also sweeter and fresher than those of other trees. Every day, the monkey would eat this fruit, and he was very happy about it. Not only could he eat his fill, he could also share some of them with his best friend, the crocodile.

Once, the crocodile took home some oranges for his wife. She loved the taste so much that she became addicted to it. The wife threatened him, "Since the monkey has consumed a lot of these oranges, his liver must taste very sweet! Bring him to me, if not I will leave you for good."

The next day, the crocodile offered the monkey a ride on the river to see the beauty of nature. The monkey hesitated because he could not swim. However, the crocodile reassured him, "I am the king of the river, you don't have to be afraid. Besides, we have been friends for such a long time now. What a shame it would be if you still cannot trust me by now." The monkey agreed eventually.
