

STRUCTURE OF HUMAN SKIN

Knowledge of the structure of skin is essential for successful administration of drugs through needle free injection systems as these drugs are administered beneath the skin. Human skin is generally made of two layers i.e., epidermis and dermis.

Epidermis: It is the outermost layer of the skin. A waterproof, protective cover above the body's surface is formed due to the epidermis; it consists of stratified squamous epithelium with an underlying basal lamina.

Blood vessels are absent in the epidermis, and nourishment to the cells present in the deepest layers is provided by means of diffusion from blood capillaries which extend to the upper layers of the dermis. Merkel cells, keratinocytes, melanocytes and langerhans cells are the main type of cells which form the epidermis.

The epidermis can be further subdivided into various strata such as (beginning with the outermost layer):

corneum, lucidum (only in palms of hands and bottoms of feet), granulosum, spinosum, basale.

Dermis: The dermis is the layer of skin below the epidermis and it consists of connective tissue and protects the body from stress and strain. The dermis is tightly connected to the epidermis by a basement membrane.

It also harbors many mechanoreceptors (nerve endings) that provide the sense of touch and heat. It consists of the hair follicles, sweat glands, sebaceous glands, apocrine glands, lymphatic vessels and blood vessels.

The blood vessels in the dermis supply nourishment and waste removal not only from its own cells but also from the stratum basale of the epidermis.

Hypodermis: It is not the part of the skin, and lies below the dermis. Its function is not only to put together the skin and the underlying bone and muscle but also supplying it with blood vessels and nerves. It mainly consists of loose connective tissue and elastin.

It consists of main cell types such as fibroblasts, macrophages and adipocytes (the hypodermis contains 50% of body fat). Fat mainly acts as padding and insulation to the body.
