Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the women was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the women. The walking program significantly improved the women's physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the women's quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

The figure consists of four subplots arranged in a 2x2 grid. Each subplot has 'Number of iterations' on the x-axis (ranging from 0 to 100) and 'Performance' on the y-axis (ranging from 0.8 to 1.0). The top-left plot shows a curve starting at approximately 0.95 and rising sharply to about 0.995 by iteration 20, then leveling off. The top-right plot shows a similar trend but with more noise in the initial part of the curve. The bottom-left plot shows a curve starting lower, around 0.9, and rising to about 0.99 by iteration 20. The bottom-right plot shows a curve starting around 0.95 and rising to about 0.995 by iteration 20. In all cases, the performance stabilizes after approximately 20-30 iterations.
