

ANSWERS AND EXPLANATIONS

Each time a person enters the room, the computer generates a number between 1 and 100 randomly. Sometimes, every time the person enters, it shows the same value. The first time the ball rolled, it was 1 and another 100 times, the computer never generated a new number. It kept showing 1 because that ball rolled. That number happened to appear the most often in that experiment.

However, the distribution was not uniform, and the computer kept the generated number and generated another 100 unique random numbers using the same random generator. The number 100 appeared the most often in that experiment, meaning that the number 100 was the most likely to appear, according to the law of large numbers. However, every time the ball rolled, it was 1, so that number, 1, did not appear, following the law of large numbers.

The number 100 did not appear in the experiment, which is not the same as not appearing every time the number 100 was generated. The number 100 was the most likely to appear, but the number 1 appeared every time the computer generated a new number. That number, 1, did not appear, following the law of large numbers.

Each time a ball rolled, the number 100 was the most likely to appear, but the number 1 appeared every time the ball rolled, which is not the same as not appearing every time the number 100 was generated.

The number 100 was the most likely to appear, but the number 1 appeared every time the ball rolled, which is not the same as not appearing every time the number 100 was generated.

The number 100 was the most likely to appear, but the number 1 appeared every time the ball rolled, which is not the same as not appearing every time the number 100 was generated.

The number 100 was the most likely to appear, but the number 1 appeared every time the ball rolled, which is not the same as not appearing every time the number 100 was generated.
