These findings indicate that the respondents perceived that their work does not have any impact on society and that they were not motivated to contribute to society. This is a negative finding for the organization as it suggests that the respondents do not see the value of their work. This could be due to a number of reasons, such as a lack of communication from the organization about its mission and vision, or a lack of training and development opportunities for the respondents. The organization should consider these findings and take steps to address them, such as improving communication and providing more training and development opportunities. This will help to ensure that the respondents see the value of their work and are motivated to contribute to society.

The undersigned do hereby certify that the above is a true and correct copy of the original.

The results of the model are presented in Table 2. The results show that the probability of a household being in the 'high' category of the dependent variable is significantly higher for households with a higher income, a higher level of education, and a higher level of employment. The results also show that the probability of a household being in the 'high' category is significantly higher for households with a higher level of social capital.
