been particularly strong during the last decades. Indeed, the Enlightenment view of the rational human mind that reasons, makes decisions, and solves problems based on logic and probabilities was shaken during the second half of the twentieth century. Cognitive psychologists discovered that human thoughts and actions often deviate from rules imposed by strict normative theories of inference. Yet these deviations should not be called errors, as cognitive psychologists have demonstrated these deviations may be either valid heuristics that succeed in the environments in which humans have evolved, or biases that are caused by a lack of adaptation to abstract information formats. Humans, as the cognitive psychologist and economist Herbert Simon claimed, do not usually optimize but rather satisfice, even when solving problems. This research topic aims at demonstrating that these insights have had a decisive impact on mathematics education. We want to stress that we are concerned with the view of bounded rationality that is different from the one espoused by the heuristics and biases program. In Simon's bounded rationality and its direct descendant, ecological rationality, rationality is understood in terms of cognitive success in the world, correspondence rather than in terms of conformity to content-free norms of coherence, e.g., transitivity.
