

Investigation A: OCEAN IN THE GLOBAL WATER CYCLE

(NOTE: Completion of this activity requires Internet access.)

Driving Question: What role does the ocean play in the global water cycle within the Earth system?

Educational Outcomes: Earth's ocean covers almost 71% of Earth's surface to an average depth of about 3.8 km (2.4 mi). Earth is truly a water planet, especially when the commanding presence of the ocean is combined with the large expanses of terrestrial ice and snow cover, lakes, groundwater, and the global presence of atmospheric moisture. Central to the functioning of the Earth system is the global water cycle, the ceaseless flow of water, energy, and water-borne materials among the oceanic, terrestrial, and atmospheric reservoirs and their interactions with life on Earth.

DataStreme Ocean employs an Earth system approach by focusing on (a) ocean components and boundaries, (b) internal and external processes that involve the ocean, and (c) the role of the ocean in biogeochemical cycles.

After completing this investigation, you should be able to:

- List advantages of the Earth system perspective in understanding the global water cycle.
- Explain ways in which satellite remote sensing aids our understanding of the ocean.
- Describe the role of the ocean as the ultimate source of fresh water everywhere on the planet.

A. The Global Water Cycle

In the holistic Earth system perspective, Earth is composed of many interacting subsystems including the ocean, atmosphere, geosphere, cryosphere, and biosphere. DataStreme Ocean investigates the role of the ocean in the Earth system. DataStreme Ocean has implications for important contemporary issues including global climate change, air and water quality, food supply, and national security.

Figure A1 below schematically illustrates the movements and transformations of water in the Earth system. The figure was developed by the Global Water Cycle program element of the US Global Change Research Program.
