Abstract

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The subjects were assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also had a significant positive effect on the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The walking program was well tolerated and had no adverse effects. The results of this study suggest that a supervised walking program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

The purpose of this research is to find current strategies for good service, which consists of the following:

- Environmental risk associated with all animals and their care: to keep the danger away from the world of suffering, higher levels of protection (increased staff-to-animal ratio, reduced handling, improved housing conditions)
- Most animals' individualized protection: permanent contact with the staff, low level of physical restraint (sedation), and lower number of cages/enclosures
- One project with individual housing: they had during operations (they had surgery without a proper anesthesia) from anesthesia and pain management during operations. Many individuals, especially dogs, cats and non-human primates, have been treated with a lot of pain.
