Pet cats are a well-known, domestic animal part of the Felidae Family. They are carnivorous and are the only member of that family to become domesticated. Cats are often found in places like houses, the streets, or can also be found on farms. Their scientific name is *Felis catus

Technical Language

Topic sentence about physical appearance

The cat's physical appearance is striking with four legs, paws and small but sharp claws. They have strong teeth, used to bite through meat and any other prey caught. Cats have two pointy ears that stick off the top of their head. They have whiskers on their face which they use to help see in the dark. Cats can be long-haired or short-haired, some even being hairless.

Cats are loved by many humans and are an excellent alternative to dogs. They can be great companions, they are also valued because of their usefulness in catching small rodents such as mice and rats.

Use of nouns

Cats always have an excellent sense of smell and taste allowing them to remain alert amidst their surroundings, their hearing and motion sensing is very acute and helps them find and hunt prey. Cats preserve their energy by sleeping for long periods of time. On average, a cat will sleep for 12-13 hours daily meaning that during the night-time they are full of energy and ready to stalk and hunt their prey. Another reason they are so good at hunting is that they sit atop their food chain with no real predators.

Present Tense

Comparative language

Labelled diagram

Like all domestic animals, there will be problems with them. Cats are an introduced species and have rightly earned a bad reputation for killing native animals. Many countries are introducing rules to ensure cats cannot hunt so freely as they have. Feral or wild cats are a genuine problem to any ecosystem.

Cats use their tongues as a natural way of cleaning themselves. They have papillae on their tongue that help to remove things such as dirt, bark, little pieces of leaves, food, and loose hair. They use their saliva to wet their fur, which is the same as having a bath for them. If there are things such as burrs stuck in the cat's fur, they will use their teeth to remove them.

Scientific language

As we have seen cats are an incredible animal that uses all its given talents to help it survive in the wild. They also make great pets and companions that are both loved and despised by many people all around the world.
