

1. The first question that we should ask is: what does it mean to say that a group is a group? In other words, what are the defining characteristics of a group?

2. The second question is: what are the different types of groups? For example, we can distinguish between formal groups (e.g., a company or a school) and informal groups (e.g., a family or a club).

3. The third question is: what are the functions of groups? In other words, what do groups do for their members? For example, groups can provide support, information, and a sense of belonging.

4. The fourth question is: what are the challenges of groups? In other words, what problems can groups face? For example, groups can experience conflict, communication problems, and a lack of motivation.

5. The fifth question is: what are the benefits of groups? In other words, what advantages do groups offer? For example, groups can provide a sense of purpose, a sense of achievement, and a sense of community.
