Declines from Population Change in Asia

Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow.

Over time, the growth rate of population change has been both slow and fluctuating worldwide. However, some nations exhibit rapid growth, as when the replacement generation for each generation reaches an abundance. In fact, the average fertility rate in population growth exceeds the level that it will produce when population growth is not occurring, and as a result there will be a growing population. When birth is less than the replacement rate, the population will decline and the number of people will decrease.

Demographic Data Table

The following table is the average fertility rate for each country. The average fertility rate is the average number of children a woman is expected to have during her lifetime.

Using the data provided, write the number of the row in which the row contains the following:

- | | |
|---|-------------------------------|
| _____ 1. The average fertility rate is greater than the average number of children. | _____ 4. Greater growth rate. |
| _____ 2. The average fertility rate is less than the average number of children. | _____ 5. Higher growth rate. |
| _____ 3. The average fertility rate is equal to the average number of children. | _____ 6. No growth rate. |
| _____ 4. The average fertility rate is less than the average number of children. | |
| _____ 5. Growth rate is the same as the average. | |

- _____ 6. Suppose that each year, the total fertility rate for each country is the same as the average fertility rate for each country. In all countries, the population will stay the same.
