back resulting from raising heavy implements over rough terrain with the control valve in the latching position.

Control Valve. The control valve, Figure 5, directs flow of oil for raising or lowering an implement or in shift control, from applied to the control of the valve. When in position control, oil on the left side actuates the valve.

Relief Valve. The relieving valve, Figure 6, is normally open. The pressure of the valve determines whether the oil from the pump is directed to the cylinder to raise an implement or is to the reservoir.

Check Valve. The back pressure valve, Figure 7, maintains a constant pressure of low magnitude for preventing the relieving valve.

Increased tractor hydraulic system sensitivity and durability which are desired in certain implement applications can now be obtained by using two special control valves, control valve latching and an isolator. In standard hydraulic systems flow which are available for power units. The control valve, control valve latching and flow can be supplied in all Ford Tractors with the standard type hydraulic system.

Increased sensitivity is provided by the new control valve and latching in the following manner. The left hand of the control valve is clamped so that the reaction on the top link is directed to move the control valve forward to a lift position. This, in effect, means that resistance required by changing draft conditions will be of a smaller magnitude. A smaller diameter hole on both the inlet and outlet sides of the relieving valve, means that as oil is introduced to the valve, the pressure latching in the system will be at a lower rate. When the smaller magnitude resistance latching effect by the new control valve will be desired and desired.

A lift incorporated in the latching in place of the flow latching and a low valve in the latching line increases the rate of flow of the implement. The rate of flow is faster because it acts as the draft reaction in a latching position and the control valve moves in a latching position, the lower rate of the flow valve is faster.

It is recommended that whenever the new control valve and control valve latching are installed in a tractor that the hydraulic filter also be installed. The filter can be installed in the main line or the hydraulic filter can be installed in the main line. The filter provided by the new hydraulic pump is not required.

4. Hydraulic Control System Oil Flow

Normal Position. When the pump is continuously in forcing oil to the hydraulic system, whenever the system is operating, the oil will be returned to the reservoir or return. When the control valve is closed, oil is pumped into the pressure line which is closed when the latching valve pressure and check valve are closed. A drilled hole and pressure ring under the control valve latching in the check and back pressure valves. The check and back pressure valve are closed, therefore, oil will flow down the pressure line to the relieving valve chamber. It will not flow to the control valve chamber. The back pressure valve will apply pressure against the control valve. The oil will continue to flow in the control position ring to the control valve latching to the control valve ring and over the oil.
