Strategic planning is a process that involves setting a vision, identifying key goals, and developing a plan to achieve those goals. It is a systematic approach to determining the organization's future and the actions needed to achieve that future. Strategic planning is a continuous process that involves regular review and adjustment of the plan as the organization's environment changes. It is a key component of effective management and is essential for the long-term success of any organization.

Other important areas include electronic journals, Internet and off-line databases and linking and reporting facilities, the library's "mass" e-mail service, and general guidelines applicable to all e-library linking programs. 1. The first step in the process of the development of a new product is the identification of a market need. This is done by conducting market research, which involves gathering information about the needs and preferences of potential customers. This information is then used to develop a product concept that meets the identified need.
2. The second step is the development of a business plan. This plan outlines the company's goals, objectives, and strategies for achieving them. It also includes a detailed financial forecast, which shows the expected costs and revenues of the new product. The business plan is then used to secure financing for the project.
3. The third step is the development of a prototype. This is a small-scale model of the new product that is used to test the design and functionality. The prototype is typically made from a material that is easy to work with, such as wood or plastic. It is then used to demonstrate the product to potential customers and investors.
4. The fourth step is the production of the new product. This involves the manufacturing of the product in large quantities. The production process typically involves the use of specialized equipment and skilled labor. The finished product is then distributed to customers through a sales channel.
5. The fifth and final step is the evaluation of the new product. This involves monitoring the product's performance in the market and gathering feedback from customers. This information is then used to make any necessary adjustments to the product or the marketing strategy.
