Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The study was a randomized controlled trial. The participants were divided into two groups: a control group and an intervention group. The intervention group received a 12-week training program consisting of aerobic and resistance exercises. The control group received no intervention. The primary outcome was the change in HRQL, measured using the SF-36 questionnaire. The secondary outcome was the change in physical fitness, measured using a 6-minute walk test. The results showed that the intervention group had a significant improvement in HRQL and physical fitness compared to the control group. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and HRQL of sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no known cardiovascular disease. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an exercise group. The exercise group performed a 12-week training program consisting of three sessions per week of aerobic and resistance training. The control group did not exercise. Physical fitness was measured by a 12-minute step test, and health was measured by a health questionnaire. The results showed that the exercise group had significantly higher physical fitness and better health than the control group after 12 weeks of training.
