Eton Raptor Manual:

Biodiversity and Conservation in Europe David L. Hawksworth, Alan T. Bull, 2007-12-03 This book brings together a selection of original studies submitted to Biodiversity and Conservation that address biodiversity and conservation in Europe. Europe is certainly the most intensively inventoried region of the world; detailed maps are available for species distributions while action plans are being drawn up for species under threat. At the same time the wildlife of Europe has been subject to enormous human pressures with limited wilderness sites remaining in most countries. Europe consequently presents a case study of what the human impact on biodiversity has been and also what can be done to improve the situation. The contributions in this volume are drawn from a wide range of countries and discuss diverse organism and habitat types. They collectively provide a snapshot of the sorts of studies and actions being taken in Europe to address issues in biodiversity and conservation. Topical examples that will make the volume especially valuable for use in conservation biology courses.

What types of records document those events? Now think about Earth's history specifically the past environmental or climatic conditions at times before recorded human history. What records might there be of such conditions? Make a list of your ideas. An assemblage of five major types of natural archives of Earth's environmental and climatic history. What common features do each of these paleoclimate archives share? An assemblage of 5 major types of natural records or archives of Earth's environmental and climatic history. Just like a diary or other historical document the layers in these natural archives contain indirect evidence i.e. proxies about past conditions and events recorded in a sequential order. The evidence is specific to a certain time period and may be general or very detailed depending on the rate that information was recorded. The faster the rate at which the recorder grew trees and corals accumulated snow and ice or was deposited sedimentary sequences the more detailed the record is and the higher its resolution. For example a record in which an annual signal can be observed has a very high resolution. In contrast if the finest observable details are on the order of a million years then that record would have a low resolution. Raptor Migration Watch-site Manual, 1995
