Further genetic studies of some, nonrecombining selfing sites, and their association with recombining sites on the same chromosome suggest different evolutionary histories for the two sets of satellite loci. The non-recombining satellite loci may have diverged earlier than the recombining loci, and may have been subject to different evolutionary pressures. These results and some others indicate that the evolutionary history of the satellite loci is more complex than the simple model of a single locus. Further studies on these loci are needed to clarify the evolutionary history of the satellite loci.

Further genetic studies are needed, since numerous self-pollinating Alb. and Alba genotypes will maintain transgressive or transgressive-like negative allometry over generations. We still need an optimal scenario, such as several generations of transgressive negative allometry and selfing, as in Arabidopsis.
