Questions and Answers Complete Study Set

A nurse is working in a unit with several less-experienced nurses. Which attribute displayed by the senior nurse would make her leadership of the less-experienced nurses most effective?

Ability to inspire the others to commit to the team's goals.

A nursing leader must be a visionary in order to empower others to make needed changes for the good of the group.

According to the behavioral view of leadership, how are leaders formed?

By being educated

With training

Through life experiences.

Behaviorists believe leaders are made, not born.

The vice president for nursing services is aware that many of the problems in the nursing staff result from poor management at the unit level. What are some reasons that nurse managers are sometimes ineffective in their role?

1. There is little training available for nurse management positions.

2. Entry-level educational programs for nurses do not contain sufficient managerial content.

3. Management techniques are often learned "on the job."

4. Nurses often experience poor supervision in their own careers.

The health care organization's monthly newsletter has a headline reading "Nurse Promoted to Leader of Specialty Care Units." What is the error inherent in this headline?

A person cannot be promoted to the role of leader.

Organizations cannot promote someone to a position of leader. Interpersonal skills influence others to accomplish a specific goal. The organization can promote a person who may become a leader.

A community hospital has been purchased by a large health care conglomerate. Nursing administration has the task of changing the nursing practice model followed for 50 years. To best achieve this change, which leadership theory will the executive nurse follow?
