Human lung capacity is an issue made possible by pleural cavity - negative pressure in pleural cavity. One way to measure volume of pleural cavity is by measuring lung capacity. Lung capacity can also be measured using a spirometer. This data provides very precise measurements of lung volume using a spirometer device.

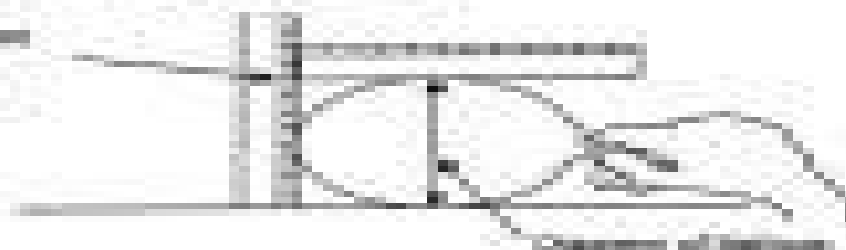

Several different lung volume measurements can be made:

1. Tidal volume is the largest possible amount of air that can be inhaled after breathing a normal breath.
2. Expiratory reserve is the amount of air that can be inhaled in the lungs after exhaling normally (it is the portion that remains inhaled air).
3. Total volume is the amount of air that can be inhaled during normal breathing.

Part A: Measuring

1. Measure the balloon circumference.
2. Use an elastic string or cord. Then divide all the air into two parts: the balloon and the portion of the balloon that is in the air.
3. Measure and record the diameter of the balloon in centimeters (see Data Table below). The difference between the two (the two circles) is the diameter of the balloon.

Record circumference of the balloon in the table below. Then divide the circumference by the diameter of the balloon to get the radius of the balloon. This is the radius of the balloon.

1. Calculate the radius and diameter of the balloon. Record the diameter of the balloon in your Data Table.
2. Using a ruler, measure the length of the balloon. Record the diameter of the balloon in your Data Table.
