

STRUCTURAL ANALYSIS

STRUCTURAL ANALYSIS

The structural analysis of a building involves determining the internal forces and moments in the various members of the structure. This is done by applying the principles of statics and dynamics. The analysis is typically performed using a computer program that takes into account the geometry of the structure, the material properties, and the applied loads. The results of the analysis are used to design the structure to safely support the loads and resist the effects of environmental factors such as wind and seismic activity.
