These data indicate that the 1990s' Russian foreign trade share in the GDP has been decreasing, in particular, the share of the non-energy goods, which is clearly a negative indicator for the country's high growth. It is also clear from the data that the share of the non-energy goods in the Russian foreign trade is still low, although the share of the non-energy goods in the country's GDP is growing. The share of the non-energy goods in the country's GDP is growing, but the share of the non-energy goods in the country's foreign trade is still low. This is a negative indicator for the country's high growth.

For the purpose of this study, the dependent variable is "C" = the number of children in the sample. Although it is not possible to manipulate this variable, information on the age of the mother, the sex of the child, the educational level of the mother, and the birth order of the child is collected. The children in the sample are born between 1970 and 1990, and the mothers are aged between 15 and 45 years old at the time of the birth of the child. The data are obtained from the 1990 census of the United States.
