

Cell Division – Examining Mitosis

Study Guide

Background

All of the genetic information of plants, animals, and other eukaryotic organisms resides within the nucleus of the cell in a diffuse mass of threadlike material called chromatin. When the chromatin becomes threadlike again, the cell goes through many generations that end in sexual reproduction or asexual reproduction called daughter cells. Interphase accounts for majority of the time that the cell is in that all parts. During interphase the cell grows, replicates its DNA, and goes through further preparations to complete another division. Shortest duration, or mitosis, is the process where the cell cell completes all the duplicated chromatin in structures called chromosomes and then separates and moves duplicated chromosomes. The chromosomes divide during cytokinesis. At the end of cytokinesis, the original parent cell is separated into two new daughter cells.

Figure 1: Duration of the cell cycle. The cell cycle is divided into four phases: interphase (80%), prophase (10%), metaphase (5%), and anaphase (5%). The cell cycle is a continuous process that results in the production of two daughter cells from one parent cell.
